Amid the hurly-burly of life, how do you, as a coach, arrive with your coachee in your most resourceful state? What environment do you create as the backdrop to your session? These things can be even more important and impactful than the tools and skills you use.

This year's conference explores a diverse number of ways in which you can achieve a useful 'state' to best serve your coachee. You can select two from the six parallel sessions available, each of which offers a different approach.

Some of the sessions present a faith approach to coaching, bringing in the principles and tenets of Buddhism, Christianity and Islam. Others apply the lenses of psychology and philosophy to create an objective view. Yet other sessions adopt a stance of emotional awareness and unconditional positive regard. The sessions are as interchangeable as they are diverse and will all spark fresh thinking and energy for your coaching practice.

Towards the end of the afternoon, we will come together as a full group – first, to learn how mindfulness and compassion can engender an appropriate coaching stance, and then to gather thoughts in a final panel session and dialogue about coaching beyond skills.

“I always benefit personally and professionally from my time at Henley.”
